THE BATH IS BACK

- At the spa and at home, soaking, salts and scrubs are in -

DALLAS – At The Spa at The Hotel Hershey, chocolate is not just a tasty treat to eat, but the featured ingredient in their signature Whipped Cocoa Bath. Thai cleansing rituals are on the menu at the Spa at Mandarin Oriental in New York. The Ritz-Carlton Spa Grande Lakes in Orlando uses local produce and natural oils in their citrus-scented soak. And at the Spa at Red Rock in Las Vegas, couples are soaking in freshly-plucked rose petals.

At the heart of these spa experiences is the bath, and leading destination resorts and spas are jumping in. Focusing on ancient traditions and modern needs, top spas nationwide are offering authentic hydrotherapy meant to relax, refresh and renew spa-goers. Spas were originally founded upon the healing benefits of waters, be it springs, rivers, oceans, or exquisite bathhouses. Water has long been considered the purest source of wellness, relaxation, and rejuvenation.

Luxury properties nationwide are leading a resurgence in hydrotherapy, bringing back the authentic bathing that defines the spa's water origins. They feature modern technology and cutting-edge design to bring bathing authenticity to their guests, and rely on SANIJET's Pipeless Spa Baths to incorporate all the best elements of hydrotherapy.

Because of SANIJET's revolutionary technology, Pipeless Spa Baths are ideal for treatments using bath additives. In conventional piped whirlpool baths, the use of additives and spa products are discouraged as they can significantly add to the accumulation of unsanitary bathing residue and harmful bacteria concealed in the tub pipes. With Pipeless hydrotherapy, the massage jets can be removed for proper disinfection, making cleaning and maintenance quick, easy and safe.

SANIJET's hydrotherapy baths are designed with vital relaxation features such as personal massage settings, targeted hydrotherapy jets, and soothing chromatherapy lighting. Unlike traditional noisy pumps and blowers, the Pipeless Baths are ultra-quiet for ultimate relaxation.

Bringing the benefits of water therapy to unparalleled design, SANIJET's full suite of products provides all the essentials for authentic hydrotherapy.
